ALKALI DUST IN HIGHLANDS IS ANNOYING

In Mexico and Desert Region is Described as a Place of Thorns and Thistles.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM) WASHINGTON, April 17.—Some idea of the difficulties which the American punitive expedition has been encountering in its work of pursuing Pancho Villa is conveyed in a statement prepared by the National Geographical Society, with headquarters in this city, and just given to the press. This statement is as follows: "Anyone who has traveled over the highlands of Mexico cannot help feeling a deep sympathy for the men who have been entrusted with the work of capturing Pancho Villa and his fellow bandits.

"When it is recalled that even in an ordinary comfortable Pullman car the alkali dust creeps through the visible cracks and gives the traveler the appearance of having been working around a threshing machine all day long, it may well be imagined what hardships soldiers must meet who have traveled on forced marches across such a region. The shifting waves of heat which hover above the

U. S. AIRMEN IN MEXICO MAKE LONG FLIGHT IN RECORD TIME

Lt. Edgar S. Gorrell (left) and Lt. Herbert A. Dargue. Their machine in flight at Casas Grandes.

Lieutenants Gorrell and Dargue, army birdmen, flew from San Antonio, Chihuahua, to Columbus, N. M., a distance of 330 miles, in four hours and ten minutes, making only one stop at Casas Grandes. "There seems to be no doubt that Villa was wounded," reported Lieutenant Dargue. "Conversations with natives and with physicians convince me that he was shot through both legs, while another bullet lodged in his stomach. A man in that condition without medical attention could scarcely live long."

land create curious mirages. Although the distance between El Paso and Casas Grandes is only 150 miles, Casas Grandes is approximately one mile higher than El Paso.

Thorns and Spines. "The desert region of Chihuahua possesses a vegetation nearly every species which is supplied with thorns or spines. There is an almost endless variety of each, ranging from tiny plants no larger than a finger to the giant palmetto, pushing its tall stem to a height of fifty feet. Then there are the mesquites, the tornillos, the agaves, and the yuccas, all armed with spikes as to repel invasion.

"Under conditions like these the cavalry arm of our military service is practically indispensable. Indeed, it is about the only kind of military force that can be used to advantage. No other part of the American army has had so much work to do in the past as the cavalry, and the present expedition proves that in spite of all that the war in Europe may seem to have taught, the American people will always thrust their cavalry when emergencies come.

"A great variety of insects and reptiles, including lizards, horned toads, tarantulas and rattlesnakes, abound in the desert. Conspicuous among the birds of the region is the chaparral cock, which attacks and eats rattlesnakes with unbridled gusto. The desert has its own remedy for snake bites. It is a plant called the sneezewort. The juice of its leaves contains a strong alkaloid, which serves as an antidote for snake poison. Snakes have a bitter dislike for it, and it is a trick of the Indians to irritate them into biting it, with the result that they quickly die in convulsions.

Butterfly Dogs. "One of the interesting products of this region is the Chihuahua dog, which resembles the sleeve dog of China and the chin koro dog of Japan. They are sometimes called 'butterfly dogs.' Usually they weigh from one to three pounds, and are often no larger than a large rat. Pure bred specimens are distinguished by a depression about the size of a pea in the forehead and by the possession of five nails on each foot. Before the tourist tide set into Mexico these dogs could be bought for $5 each. Now they often sell for hundreds and even thousands of dollars. Many an American traveler has bought a tiny canine alleged to be a Chihuahua dog only to have it afterwards develop into a large and lusty cur.

"When one gets out of the desert region of Chihuahua and into the Sierra Madre mountains there is found a winter that is like May or October in New England and a summer that is like the 'life tables' prepared by life insurance companies but differ from them in that they relate to the entire population of the area covered, whereas the life insurance tables relate only to risks selected through medical examination and otherwise.

Expectation of life at birth, in a stationary population—that is, one in which the births and deaths were equal and were the same from year to year, and in which there was no immigration or emigration—would be the same as average age at death, which is calculated by totalizing the ages of all deceased persons and dividing the result by the number of deceased persons.

Women Live Longer Than Men.

According to these tables the average expectation of life, at birth, for males is 49.9 years; females 53.2 years; for white males 50.2 years;

for white females, 53.6 years; for native white males 50.6 years; for native white females, 54.2 years; for negro males, 34.1 years, and negro females 37.7 years. Females are thus longer lived than males to the extent of more than three years, and in the case of the native whites and negroes, more than three and one-half years.

The expectation of life at the age of one year is considerably greater than at birth, being 56.8 years for native white males and 59.5 for native white females, and reaches its maximum at the age of two, when it is 57.5 for the former class and 60.1 for the latter. At the age of 12 years the average native white male's expectation of life is 50.2 years; at 25 it is 39.4 years; at 40, 29.3 years; at 50, 21.2 years; at 60, 14.6 years; at 70, 9.1 years; and at 80, 5.2 years. Similarly, at the age of 12 the average native white female's expectation of life is 52.6 years; at 25, 41.8
